[From the Hudson Register.] Two young men residing at Valatie undertook on Sunday afternoon to settle a dispute by means that, if persisted in to the end, might have led to very serious results, and, as matters stand, still leaves all parties concerned liable to an extremely unpleasant acquaintance with the District Attorney. The two young men who figured as principals are respectively aged about twenty and twenty-two years. It appears that the latter some time ago formed an acquaintance with a young woman employed as a domestic at one of the Valatie hotels. The acquaintance ripened with time, and the young man became her escort and companion. Thus far the young lady found no dissatisfaction with her sweetheart. But the smoothness of the courtship was destined to become ruffled and a blight to be cast over the sweet visions of the future in which the fair hotel employe revelled. Her "young man" came into a legacy. It was of an inconsiderable amount, but still large enough to cause ber admirer to become for the time a devotee of that bowl which has destroyed so many young dreams of love.

In her gricf, when she found that her idol was of clay, the young lady turned for consclation to the other young man in whom she had found many attractive qualities, and who had also the recommendation of being a knight of the "blue ribbon." Thereafter be filled the place in her heart previously occupied by the discarded one, who was compelled to stand afar off and witness love's second growth. Matters proceeded in this way until a few days ago, when lover No. 1, in his desperation at his loss, sought a quarrel with his successful rival. Hot words were bandied to and fro, and finally the latter proposed that they should fight the matter out. To this the other readily acceded, and in accordance with the usual privileges that prevail in such affairs chose pistols as the weapons, Sunday afternoon as the time, and an unfrequented road near the "Charles-Wild farm," in the north part of the town, as the place. This was rather more than lover No. 2 had bargained for, but finally all arrangements as to secrecy and seconds were made, and the parties abided that eventful hour.

About 2:30 on Sunday afternoon four young men gathered at the place indicated. Two of them were the parties who proposed to risk life for the beautiful maiden, who was quite unconscious of the possible tra-gedy in which she was so deeply concerned. The remaining two were the "seconds," who gravely examined the pistols and pronounced them sufficiently murderous. The ground was duly paced off and the two rivals, with faces as pale as death, were being placed in position, when No. 1 demanded parley. The seconds looked dubiously at the other man. A tumultuous struggle was raging in his breast. On the one hand honor called upon him to devote the last drop of his blood for his "ladie faire," but then—it was so hard to die, and there were so many, many others whom he might learn to love. While these thoughts flashed through his brain the courage of his opponent was rapidly "oozing out at his finger-ends," and simultaneously the parties cast down their weapons, and, to the intense surprise and disgust of the waiting seconds, rushed upon each other. A short, sharp struggle followed, and at its close lover No. 1 lay prostrated, with bleeding nose and other marks of punishment, at the feet of his foe, who demanded immediate surrender of all the soul within their eyes.

And fill the soul within their eyes.
For them the immortal bards have sung:

Irishman and an Episcopalian, is now equally interested in the return of the newly-married couple and their reconciliation with the young lady's family. Miss Wise, it will be remembered, is the daughter of the Rev. Isaac M. Wise, the eminent rabbi, editor of the American Israelite of this city, and author of "The Origin of Christianity" and other religious works.

Miss Wise met Mr. Molony about two years ago. He was introduced at the rabbi's house by young Leo. Wise, the rabbi's son, and at once fell in love with Miss Helen. Dr. Wise forbade the match on account of the difference of religion, and requested Mr. Moleny to discontinue his visits to the house. Mr. Molony did so, but kept up an uninterrupted correspondence with the young lady in the meanwhile-a corre- I'll get on the box, and drive you there for spondence which resulted four weeks ago in her leaving her father's residence and accompanying her lover to the house of a Unitarian minister, where they were duly he sees a Captain crossing the barrack-yard

On hearing the news Dr. Wise disowned his daughter, and forbade her ever to see him again. It was the opinion of friends of the family, however, that the irate father would relent sooner or later, and the result has verified this prediction. On Friday evening last, the eve of the Jewish Sabbath, Dr. Wise sent for Mrs. Molony, and, after a very pathetic scene, forgave her for the step she had taken, and sent for her husband. Mr. Molony obeyed the summons, and he and his wife passed the evening at the rab-bi's house, the reconciliation being made complete with the example set by her own family. Mrs. Molony is now, of course, welcome again into Jewish society, the nine days' wonder is at an end, and the awkward possibilities of the future are left to take care of themselves.

Yea, all the world would cry out " Shame "Virgiois—once so proud— Has she, by demagogues misled, "To such vile meanness bowed?"

No; honest let her still remain,
And bravely do her best.
That on her high and honored name
No stain may ever rost.

Her lands are poor; that may be true, To some extent at least; But still on flesh and fish and fowl Her children daily feast. They eat and drink of the very best,
And dress as fine as ever;
For want of good and wholesome food
They will never starve, no, never.

Her good name if you filch from her, Then she would be poor indeed, And would of rags to hide her shame Stand very much in need.

Better be honest, if we are poor; That seems to me quite plain; By cheating our poor creditors No honor can we gain.

The law of God we must obey;
He said, "Thou shait not steal";
And that is a law no sovereign State
On earth can now repeal.

Don't listen to the tempter's voice, My proud old Common wealth; Forever scorn to seek for power By falsehood and by stealth.

Let candidates for office howl, And blind the people's eyes; Their arguments, so plausible, Are built on barefaced lies.

The gift of the gab is all they have, Of which they can be proud; Of no great talents can they boast, Although they speak so loud. Of honesty they have not a bit;
The truth they never tell,
When lies, to please the gaping crowd,
Would answer just as well.

They are searching for the loaves and fishes; At home they dine on empty dishes; They care not for the poor a straw, So they on bribes can lay their paw, And into office gally ride Upon a strong and swelling tide.

Lost to all decency and shame, The highest virtue still they claim; The money-ring they all despise; In doing so can they be wise? They have no money to buy bread, And all their credit is long since dead.

The people's love is what they seek With looks so lamb-like and so meek; No selfish views they entertain, And not a dollar hope to gain; Then let them stay at home and not en let them stay at home and rest ;

The Colonel, a rigid martinet, is sitting at the window of his room, when looking out toward the gate. Looking at him closely, he is shocked to observe that, the rules and regulations to the contrary notwithstanding, the Captain does not carry a sword. "Captain!" he calls from the window;

"Hi, Captain; step up to my room for a moment, will you?" The Captain obeys promptly, borrows sword of the officer of the guard, the guard-room being at the foot of the stairs, and presents himself to the Colonel in irreproachable tenue. The Colonel is somewhat surprised to see the sword in its place, and, having to invent some pretext for calling his subordinate back, says, with some confusion: "I beg your pardon, Captain; but really I've forgotten what it was I wanted to speak to you about. However, it can't have been anything very important; it'll keep. Good morning."

The Captain salutes, departs, returns the the barrack-yard, when he again comes and AT LOW PRICES, every description of within the range of the Colonel's vision.

The Colonel rubs his eyes, stares, says an occasional mistake in English, which he softly to himself, "How in thunder is this? Dem it, he hasn't a sword to his waist"

The Captain returns, borrows the sword again, mounts the stairs, and enters the Colonel's presence. His commanding officer stares at him intently; he has a sword, he sees it; he hears it clank.

"Captain," he stammers, growing very hot, "it's deuced ridiculous, you know, but-ba! ha!-I'd just remembered what I wanted to say to you, and now-ha! ha!it? Ha! ha! ha! Losing my memory. Good morning."

The Captain salutes, departs, returns the sword to the owner, and makes for the gate. As he crosses the barrack-yard the Colonel calls his wife to his side and says, "See that officer out there?" "Yes."

"Has he got a sword on?" The Colonel's wife adjusts her eye-glasses upon him, scans him keenly, and says, "He hasn't a taste of a sword." The Colonel: "That's just where you fool yourself. He bas!"
